Star Trek is nearly immortal and in that most fickle of mediums, television, that's saying something. This program goes "Beyond the scenes, beyond the myth" to provide a nuts and bolts view of the little-known process of getting the show onto the screen. Normally unseen by the viewing public, the writers, directors, producers, and other network decision-makers are interviewed about their roles and struggles in bringing the quest of Starship Enterprise to the small screen. Well, I finally got around to getting the book, "Inside Star Trek: The Real Story". This was co-authored by Robert Justman (co-producer) and Herbert Solow (executive producer), regarding a lot of the behind-the-scenes details about TOS. I have to say that it's a fascinating book, exposing a lot of things that were definitely left unsaid by everyone else (especially Roddenberry). This is predominantly through the eyes of Solow, as he provides a bit more detail than Justman. But both perspectives are just as valuable. True, it had some impact on the Star Trek production, but I really felt like a lot of it could have been trimmed back. Solow and Justman had to juggle other TV obligations at the time, including Bruce Geller's Mission: Impossible.
